Question: Which fault can produce a magnitude 8.0 earthquake?
Answer: "San Andreas"
Sufficient context (label = 1)
Insufficient context (label = 0)
Many faults are able to produce a magnitude 6.7+ earthquake, such as the San Andreas Fault, which can produce a magnitude 8.0 event.
≠
In southern California there are also twelve cities with more than 200,000 residents and 34 cities over 100,000 in population.
topically related replacement
Other faults include the San Jacinto Fault, the Puente Hills Fault, and the Elsinore Zone.
=
Other faults include the San Jacinto Fault, the Puente Hills Fault, and the Elsinore Zone.
The USGS has released a California Earthquake forecast which models earthquake occurrence in California.
=
The USGS has released a California Earthquake forecast which models earthquake occurrence in California.
Quality filters applied to every pair:
(a) gold answer absent from replacement; (b) length ratio 0.5–2.0; (c) cosine similarity ≥ 0.5